Susan has been employed by the U.S. EPA since 1980 in various positions involving every aspect of waste management and remediation. She is currently the Deputy Director of the waste remediation enforcement office at EPA headquarters in Washington, DC, establishing policy for compelling private parties to clean up old and abandoned toxic waste sites under the billion dollar Superfund program, the RCRA corrective action program and the UST and OPA remediation programs. Previously, Susan directed the RCRA enforcement program, establishing national policy on waste enforcement, penalties and site clean-up. From 1980 to 1988, Susan held a variety of positions with responsibility for developing hazardous waste regulations and setting hazardous waste facility permitting policies. Susan is an attorney and a graduate of Georgetown University Law Center. She is a member of the District of Columbia bar and the American Law Institute.
